From present indications the senators who have been appointed by the governors in the states in which legislatures had a chance to elect and did not do it will not be admitted. Their rejection would be in harmony with recent precedent. The question of admission is sure to cause a long fight if it comes up.

The president of the United States has no commission, no certificate of election, not the scratch of a pen in his possession to indicate that he has been elected or that he legally holds the office. The count of the electoral vote is during the joint session of the senate and house, the announcement is made by the presiding officers of the result, and, according to the latest statute on the subject, "This announcement shall be deemed sufficient qualification." No committee is appointed to wait upon the president-elect, no messenger is dispatched to him with notice of the result, and unless he reads the newspapers or is told by some of his friends he will remain in ignorance. It is considered by some to be a curious omission on the part of the framers of the law, but it has never yet given any inconvenience and it is not probable that it ever will.

IN JAPAN.

The New Woman is Largely in Evidence in the Japanese Kingdom.
During a description of the woman of Japan a correspondent of the St. Louis Dispatch says:

The girls' middle schools are like our public day schools. The education given is excellent and quite up to all modern requirements, while at the same time the characteristic elements of a Japanese lady's education are preserved.

The traditional accomplishments of a Japanese lady were, however, not forgotten, and there were rooms set apart for giving instructions in the arrangement of flowers, the details of the tea ceremony, and in playing the go. Without proficiency in these three accomplishments no Japanese lady is thought to be completely educated.

The technical and industrial schools for girls in Japan are admirable institutions. One of the most interesting girls' schools is undoubtedly the school for peeresses at Tokyo. In this the empress takes the keenest interest; she visits the school every week, and knows all the girls by name. The students are daughters of the "daimios" and noblemen. If the empress had not herself taken the lead in the movement for the higher education of the women of the noble classes it is doubtful if Japanese noblemen would have consented to send their girls to a public day school; that they do so is proof of the earnestness with which the Japanese have adopted modern western education.

FRENCH VIOLINS ARE BEST.

German and English Instruments Are Lacking Tone and Finish.

Probably there is no musical instrument made in such infinite diversity of quality as the violin. The lowest grades come from Germany, and are sold at retail from $2 to $4.

Even the very cheapest, when properly played, says the Boston Globe, yield a very fair tone in skillful hands, though, of course, the "carrying power" is small. These fiddles are made from woods stamped into the required shape under great pressure, the backs from maple or rosewood and the tops from pine, the whole being finished off very rapidly by some quick-drying spirit varnish. Very often a fancy label, bearing the name of some well-known maker now dead, is pasted inside, in order to delude the unwary; while at times a semblance of antiquity is artificially imparted, the marks of wear being imitated remarkably well. Occasionally it happens that people who have slight knowledge of violins are taken in by these ingenious frauds. France unquestionably holds the first position in producing high-class modern violins. The English instruments are usually heavy, both in substance and in tone, while those of the best French make are nearly always exquisite in model, workmanship and tone. The finest Strads, Amatis and all the glorious rest are copied with a fidelity little short of the marvelous.

What Was Needed.

The minister had been in the little Kentucky town but a short time, and when he was called on to preach a funeral sermon he thought it best to pick up a few facts about the deceased.

"I trust our brother gone before us was a truly religious man?" he said to the surviving brother.

"You bet he was," was the earnest answer. "Why, brother, he never took out his gun to lay for one of the Simmonses without first praying three hours."—Cincinnati Enquirer.
